Architectural principles in the age of humanism By Rudolf Wittkower

The author summarizes in this softcover book first published in 1949, and reprinted into the 1960s, his studies on Renaissance architecture. By using contemporary sources with his analysis of the monuments themselves, he disposes of the old and aesthetic theory of Renaissance architecture. By integrating this architecture with other disciplines such as music, philosophy and science, he opens up entirely new vistas. Religious symbolism and conceptions of proportion are discussed, framing sections on Alberti and Palladio specifically as masters of humanist architecture.
